About the stand-up comics:

Lenny Marcus has been a standup comedian in New York City for over 12 years. He has performed at both the prestigious Just for Laughs Comedy Festival in Montreal, Canada and HBO's U.S. Comedy Arts festival, in Aspen, Colorado. Lenny's other credits include performances on NBC's Friday Nite, NBC's Comedy Showcase with Louie Anderson and MTV's Jim Brewer Show. He is the creator and costar of Superstar Talent, an online sitcom now in its second season. This past year, Lenny wrote and coproduced a show for Comedy Central's Motherload website called Crash Course in Comedy. In addition, you may have seen him in commercials for the MTV Video Movie Awards, Wendy's and Marriott or heard some of his radio characters in commercials for Southwestern Bell Telephone and Priceline. Lenny has also written for national publications such as Us Weekly Magazine, Life and Style magazines and is a contributing writer for DailyComedy.com. He has a CD, "You're Getting a Zero," which will keep audiences laughing for years to come.

Tom Van Horn started performing standup back in 1993 after his girlfriend of nine years dumped him. Having a lot of anger and bitterness and nowhere to vent it, he went to an open mic and spewed his feelings about his life to a room full of strangers. Hey, it was cheaper than going to therapy! Cut to 2006 where he is now a regular in the NYC comedy club circuit. Other credits include writing for the Friars Roasts and US Weekly Magazine as well as appearances in numerous TV commercials.
